Magnetic stimulation in migraine diagnosis and therapy. We review the use of magnetic stimulation techniques in the evaluation of migraine, in the identification of different types of migraine or of its different aspects, and in the acute and preventive treatment of migraine. We found that surface magnetic stimulator techniques and specifically the stimulation of the vertex, the pericranium, and temporalis muscles are useful in the diagnosis of migraine, also in conditions in which the patients have contraindications to brain imaging. Magnetic stimulation has helped establish the relationship of the neurobiological mechanisms in migraine with clinically relevant phenomena such as cortical spreading depression and trigeminal autonomic neuralgia. The use of magnetic stimulation for the acute or preventive treatment of migraine, especially the activation of cortical spreading depression, the pulsed electromagnetic field, or the electrical stimulation of the motor cortex or the trigeminal root, is promising.<sup>55</sup>. The general consensus in the literature is that, after joint destruction, bone degrades and levels of bone resorption increase. These changes may contribute to the stimulation of local or systemic inflammatory events that trigger the cascade of events culminating in cartilage and bone erosion. In vitro and in vivo evidence suggests that synovial fibroblasts and HSCs produce IL-6 and TNF-alpha, thus contributing to the perpetuation of inflammation and to the progression of joint damage [ @bib0160]. IL-6 stimulates cartilage destruction by increasing the expression of matrix metalloproteinase (MMP)-1 and MMP-3 in chondrocytes and synoviocytes [ @bib0165], and it inhibits proteoglycan synthesis by inhibiting the synthesis and/or retention of aggrecan [ @bib0170]. TNF-alpha, produced by HSCs and synovial fibroblasts, increases matrix metalloproteinases, and inhibit the synthesis of type II collagen [ @bib0175], [ @bib0180], [ @bib0185]. In the human model, Krishnan et al. showed that joint inflammation induced by intra-articular injection of carrageenan resulted in the elevation of synovial levels of MMP-1, MMP-3, and MMP-13 and this was associated with increases in chondrocyte apoptosis and cartilage degradation [ @bib0190]. In another study, the same group found that K/BxN mice exposed to CFA

Q: Using Environment Variables to dynamically change runtime parameter for ArcGIS Server workbench? I'm experimenting with how to make my application more 'user-friendly' and I'm wondering if I can use environment variables to determine the parameters that my arcgis server workbench application runs with. For example, I have two environments: development and deployment. With dev, I might want the workbench to run with the following settings: address - 123.45.67.89 port - 4444 In production, I want the settings to change to be like: address - 192.168.0.1 port - 9999 Here is my environment.py file: import sys, os, urllib, json # Determine application name # i.e. app = appname.main appname = sys.argv[0] # Determine 'build' folder app_root = os.path.abspath(os.path.join(os.path.dirname(__file__), os.pardir, os.pardir)) app_root_dir = os.path.normpath(app_root) workspace_dir = os.path.normpath(os.path.join(app_root_dir, "..")) workspace_dir_path = os.path.normpath(os.path.join(workspace_dir, "..")) app_path = os.path.normpath(os.path.join(app_root, "..", "bin", "app")) app_workspace_path = os.path.normpath(os.path.join(workspace_dir, "..")) # Determine application name workbench_app_name = os.environ.get('WORKBENCH_APP_NAME') app_name = "{}.{}".format(workbench_app_name, appname) # App version app_version = '{}'.format(os.environ.get('VERSION')) # Get workbench key from url workspace = json.loads(urllib.urlopen("").read()) workspace_key = workspace
